CAMPUS COMES ALIVE!

By: Eliayna Burnett

August is packed full of events to kick off the new school year. Everyone has an opportunity to have fun and get involved.

August Events

SA Mixer

As the first event of the year, it is a way to welcome new students but also welcome all students back for a new and eventful school year. It contained mass games of rock, paper, scissors and group discussions. The students intermingled and introduced themselves through balloon-assigned names. It was followed by an elimination game that required each student to quickly pair up and move into the Barrel, Backpack, or Bronco position with their partner. The entire event was intended to have a fun kick-off for the rest of the year. “It was fun to interact with new people and meet new students,” said senior Gabriela Pascual. The night ended with the annual handshake.

Icebreakers

After the first week of classes, the students prepared for a school-wide competition. Each student was assigned to a randomized group giving them each a color. The 10 teams played in several games, including thawing a frozen t-shirt and getting the shirt on one lucky team member. Another event required surgical precision as students set up a tower of cups without using their hands. At the end, each team had to use a sponge to transfer enough water to fill a tube full of holes.

When all the points were tallied, Team Green came in third, Team Orange came in second, and Team Yellow came in first. This was a fun way to spend the evening to get the school year off to a great start.

Ice-cream Social.

The Ice Cream Social connects the school and church community by hosting an ice cream buffet on Highland Academy’s front campus. People from the community bring their favorite ice cream and eat it picnic-style on front campus while listening to Pastor Will Labrenz and the praise team sing. Ellie Cortez, a four-year Senior, provided us with a spectacular message that evening about patience, and her own experience with it.

GYMNIX TRYOUTS

By: Magdalen Carlson

Gymnix changed its tryout process this year by adding a week-long skills clinic before actual tryouts. Forty-five students attended the clinic, and 16 new members ultimately joined the 33-person team. Head Coach Bryce Reading introduced the clinic to give potential new members an opportunity to learn or improve their skills before being evaluated, especially with only 17 returning members on the team.

During the first week of school, the coaches and captains created a mini clinic for students who wanted to work on skills before they tried out, instead of beginning with tryouts as in previous years. Lyla Litchfield, a senior and returning member, said, “It’s nice seeing all the people who don’t have experience get to learn things before they try out.” Litchfield went on to say that seeing people enjoy themselves so quickly and able to apply what the coaches taught was also nice. Both the captains and the coaches worked together to teach and keep the students safe throughout the skills clinic.

One of the captains, Sienna Shoemaker, said, “I like how we did two weeks of it [clinic plus tryouts], so people were learning skills before we even started.” Sophomore Cin Piang, a new member, liked having the clinic before tryouts because “I felt more confident. It was reassurance that I knew what I was doing.” He learned that “when you do something it’s good to not rush it. In a sense it’s quality over quantity.” That was the sentiment of many who tried out referencing how the clinic really helped them understand expectations as well as work on the skills they would demonstrate during the next week of tryouts.

At the end of each practice the coaches put everyone through an intense burnout mini-workout, which worked on all the different muscle groups. The rest of the mini clinic had students learning how to fly in an elevator, base a two-high and come down from an elevator by doing an instant down.

Week two, the coaches started the actual tryouts with many strength tests including: sit-ups, back extensions, pushups, planks and more. Captains, existing members and new recruits pushed through every rigorous test as best as they could. All of those in attendance got the chance to demonstrate what they learned in the first week.

As the week of tryouts came to a close and Friday morning approached, students grew anxious because that morning Reading was going to post the new team roster. Early Friday morning he walked into the Ad Building and pinned the roster onto the board. Including captains, there were 33 students on the list. Only 17 out of 33 were returning gymnasts.

AUGUST EVENTS

All the students met in the cafeteria for a delicious, Mediterranean meal provided by our kitchen staff, before heading to the outdoor classroom. As a school, we participated in communion and the Ordinance of Humility. The staff washed the students' feet to show that they wanted to serve the school and students in a Christ-like way. Afterward, the students went up to Ponce Hall to listen to Pastor Andrews’ final message.

As we approach the end of August, there are still a couple of events to look forward to: Faculty Family and Class-on-class dodgeball.

Faculty family is when the faculty selects a group of students to take on outings every few months or provides them with gifts from time to time. The kick-off to Faculty Family will be Friday, August 28 for supper with them and vespers.

Class-on-class dodgeball is a competitive game of dodgeball between classes. These points count toward your class’s rankings, so wear your class color and be ready for dodgeball the last weekend of August.

WHY SLEEP MATTERS

By: Helena Cortelli

Mental Health

Imagine being awake at 2 a.m., still unable to sleep. A test is scheduled for the next day, and you keep thinking, “I need to sleep.” However, you stay awake, and the next day, you struggle to remember what you studied. For students, losing sleep because of homework, extracurricular activities or screen time can have consequences that extend beyond feeling tired the next morning. According to the Child Mind Institute, 60% to 70% of teens lack enough sleep. It’s understandable why, some people have to do homework or chores. For others it could be sports or other activities. Even so, the body and brain still need adequate rest.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports that teens ages 13 to 18 should regularly get eight to 10 hours of sleep per night for optimal health. Adequate sleep allows the body and brain to recover and supports overall health. Sleep may also help the brain clear metabolic waste that accumulates during waking hours. This is important because efficient removal of waste from the brain supports healthy brain function over time. Sleep is the brain’s clean up time. It works to remove the waste, helping it reset and function effectively the next day.

Getting enough sleep can also support emotional regulation and the body's response to stress. The National Library of Medicine always tells teens to go to sleep if they’ve been studying late into the night. It plays an important role in consolidating newly learned information into long-term memory. clears mental fog, sharpens focus and lowers stress hormone levels to think clearly even under pressure.

When asked if she’d rather a student get enough sleep or stay up late studying, Mrs. Kuntz, Highland’s science teacher and librarian, said, “I think getting enough sleep is more important than studying for a test, personally. I think you’ll do better if you get more sleep, even if you spend more time studying.”

Many teenagers have experienced an all-nighter, whether because of a school deadline, extracurricular activities or time spent with friends. However, staying awake all night can negatively affect the brain and body with impaired memory,bad moods and slower reaction time. Sophia Joy, a sophomore, described her experience after staying up all night: “I was exhausted, and I fell asleep during my classes, especially the ones that I was studying for.”

So, how can teens improve their sleep? Routines can help with that. NEMOURS Teen Health recommends shutting down all electronics one hour before bedtime. Read a book, a devotional, write something or maybe do light stretches. These activities can help the brain begin to wind down before sleep. Keeping a bedroom cool and dark can promote better sleep. The National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute says that darkness signals the body to release melatonin, a hormone involved in regulating the sleep-wake cycle. Keeping a consistent bedtime and wake-up time can help regulate the body's circadian rhythm. The National Library of Medicine has also linked regular sleep patterns with better metabolic and cardiovascular health.

Now imagine it’s 2 a.m. again. Instead of staring at a textbook and worrying about tomorrow’s test, you put your work away, turn off the light and get ready for bed. The test will still be there the next day, but you will be more rested and ready to face it. Sometimes, getting ready for tomorrow starts with something as simple as ending the day sooner and getting enough sleep.

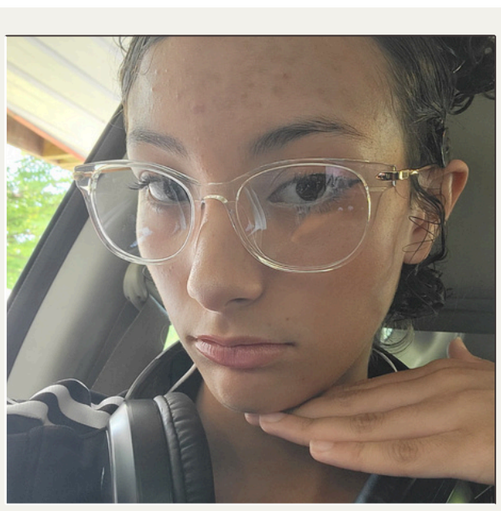
STUDENT HIGHLIGHTS

By: Emily Richards and Julia Ayers



Mariah Libbman is a freshman at Highland Academy. She was born in Asheville, North Carolina and now lives in Monterey, Tennessee. She has one sibling: a younger brother. She says her favorite thing about school so far is the food, and one thing she thinks makes Highland Academy special is the spiritual atmosphere. A fun fact about her is that she was named after Mariah Carey. Being a fashionista is Libbman's dream job, and someday, she hopes to go on Broadway. One thing she would like to learn to do in the next few years is play the cello. Her go-to snack is goldfish and her favorite musical is Hamilton. Something that she thinks people might be surprised to learn about her is that she is part Korean.

Emilee Siegel is a junior at Highland Academy. She was originally from Redlands, California. Emilee has 3 siblings, Siegel loves the junk games that are hosted at Highland, and she really appreciates her friends and the people around her. A fun fact about Siegel is that she can backflip and she loves gymnix. She is looking forward to going on the Junior History Trip that is in October! Even though she misses her older brother, she has all her friends with her. Her favorite memory is spending time with Tawi-nu! Her favorite type of movie genre is Christmas movies.

Daniel Bagshaw, also known as CB, is a sophomore here at Highland Academy. He is originally from Hendersonville, Tennessee and now he lives in Portland Tennessee. Bagshaw's favorite thing about Highland is "the vibes." He really appreciates people that are willing to give and not take. He loves his friends and looks forward to being a leader of gymnastics! His favorite school memory so far is doing the gymnastics tryouts. His favorite genre of movies is action, and his favorite movie is Top gun!

Nakyi Weathersby is a senior from New Orleans, Louisiana, who has been a student at Highland for two years. She used to attend Bass Memorial Academy, but after it closed, she decided to come to Highland Academy. A fun fact about her is that she is the youngest of six siblings. If she could travel anywhere tomorrow, she would visit New Zealand, where she would go to a sports game and do some sightseeing. When asked what her favorite meal is, she replied, "Thanksgiving." Her dream job is to be a psychiatrist because she thinks that the mind is interesting. Some of Weathersby's hobbies include sleeping, eating, talking and singing; she even sings on stage at church once in a while. Her favorite school memory was the Junior History Trip, and the best part of it was scootering around Washington, D. C. One thing she says makes Highland Academy special is the teachers, because "all of them have really cool personalities and I think all of them show God's character."

WEEK OF PRAYER

By: Eliayna Burnett

Our speaker for this year's Week of Spiritual Emphasis was Pastor Andrew Corp, a friend of Pastor Mikey Ayala. He came with his wife and daughter to witness at Highland Academy for a week, talking about our theme, Get in the Way. Pastor Corp gave us a message on the first day about getting out of our own way. He defined for us what sin actually is, which boiled down to lawlessness, as opposed to unlawfulness. The lack of law, not its opposite. He said that sin is not the behavior we exhibit but the place in our heads where we decide we do not car about the law and will do what we think is right.

He told us a story about the car he had in high school, which he had affectionately named "Carlene."
He also told us the story of how he was speeding on a highway and passed a police officer. Instead of pulling him over, the police officer pulled over a semi-truck. Pastor Corp equated this with the message, saying he didn't care about the law until he faced the possible repercussions. The guilt didn't settle in when he broke the law, but when the punishment came into view. Sin deludes us into thinking that our way is better than God's way. And when we trade the truth of God for the lies of the devil, we are stealing from ourselves. He told us that ultimately, God's way is the one we are to be in.

On day two, Pastor Corp talked about the isolation that this generation feels. He gave statistics about the loneliness that people reported feeling, despite living in the most connected time in history. He said that if there are things we are hiding from our friends and family because we think we will be abandoned, then we cannot willingly give them to God. In our isolation, sin can easily sneak in and fill the voids that we created in ourselves. He connected the previous day's message by saying that sin is a state of mind, and this is where sin will lead us. Pastor Corp reminded us that God knows everything, and despite all he's seen, he loves us entirely. God's way is not a way of isolation, but a way of community and love. Autumn Nicholas, a sophomore, noted that "It's crazy how much sin can influence our lives, especially when it comes to our connection with other people."

Halfway through the week, Pastor Corp continued with the story of the prodigal son. He told us how the son came home, much as he had left, and his father ran to him. He compared the father to God, saying that God does not wait for you to get home but will meet you where you are. Pastor Corp used a demonstration with Seniors Danielle Caldwell and Nakyi Weathersby to show that as you move forward as a person, the person you want to be is always out of reach, while the gap between you and who you used to be grows wider. He called it the gratitude gap. On Thursday, he discussed the symbolism in the last few verses of the Prodigal Son story. The robes, ring, and sandals the son was gifted on his arrival were symbolic of the father's acceptance and reinstatement to his place as son. The other son was also a symbolic warning that we cannot earn our way into our father's house. No amount of work or effort will be enough to save us; only the acceptance that our father has invited us into his house. "The entire week I really liked the message of the Prodigal son and how he [God] really loves us no matter what happens and he'll always accept us," said sophomore, Sophia Joy.

The final day of the Week of Spiritual Emphasis was the Agape Feast. After we had communion in the outdoor classroom, we heard Pastor Corps final message. He shared his experience at Southern Adventist University's Passion-Play, where he played a man leading the mob against Jesus. He shared that, despite his antagonistic role, he still saw God's message through it, because each time he performed his part, "Jesus" would still heal him.

Pastor Corp told us about the suffering of Jesus on the Crucifixion Day, the beatings and the nails. He told us that even though Jesus felt all the pain, he did not leave the cross. It was not the nails that held him there; it was his love for the world. Senior Saniya Livingston said "I really enjoyed Friday night and I thought that what he said was really impactful when he said that Jesus wasn't hanging by the nails but by the love he had for us,"
With the end of the Week of Spiritual emphasis, I'm sure there are many ways we can look back on the stories and messages Pastor Corp shared with us and use them in our everyday lives and walks with Christ.

STAFF HIGHLIGHT- DEAN FOWLER

By: Helena Cortelli

A new school year often brings new faces to campus, and this year, not just the students but a new head dean, Arenice Fowler. As she begins her new role, students will be able to get to know the person behind the position. From what brought her to Highland Academy to her favorite food, Fowler has a variety of interests and experiences.

Living in Collegedale for the past 20 years, Fowler is serving as a dean for the first time. Before coming to Highland, she worked in IT for FedEx from home, with her official office based in Orlando, Florida. She also coached girls' volleyball for around 18 years at Collegedale Academy. Fowler had heard about Highland Academy from her daughter, who was a Gym-Master from Southern Adventist University who visited HA for Acrofest. When asked why she wanted to work at Highland Academy, Fowler said, "I like the culture, and how everybody seems to really want to serve God."

Faith is an important part of Fowler's life. She has always worshiped God, and the older she got, the more she saw the advantage of it and grew ever closer to him. Her favorite way to worship God is through singing, especially hymns and camp songs.

There's more to Fowler than her work and faith, however. When asked about her dream vacation, she said she would love to go to Argentina. She said she'd love to go on a mountain bike ride and take a tour of the many different scenic spots there. She also has pets: a white golden doodle named Azula and a Doberman named Shego. The dogs are close friends, and they feel comfortable with each other.

Fowler's favorite food is mango. "Mango is my favorite, different kinds of mangoes" she said, whether it comes from Haiti, South America or the Philippines. Outside of work, she enjoys spending her free time with some of her hobbies. She enjoys mountain biking and listening to audiobooks. The most common compliment she receives is that she has a nice smile. And she's right! She does have a wonderful smile.
She has already jumped into the Bike Club and is learning more about student council and dorm life in Johnson Hall.

As Fowler begins her new role at Highland Academy, students will have the chance to get to know her not only as a dean but also as a person. From her faith to her favorite food, dream places to visit and her pets, these small details offer a glimpse into the person joining our school. The students look forward to welcoming Fowler and seeing the positive impact she will make throughout the year.

SETTLING INTO THE DORM

By: Eliayna Burnett

As a boarding school, Highland Academy has a distinct dorm culture. Traditions, schedules and expectations are ingrained in all the returning students who reside there that could be daunting to the new faces. Settling into the dorm can be one of the hardest transitions for a new resident. It can be difficult to start feeling comfortable in this new environment, but there are some small, easy ways to make the dorm feel like a home away from home.

When asked how to be successful in the dorm, Dean Fowler, the new girls' dean, shared, "I'd say the first thing is to start with a relationship with God, so he can give them wisdom and peace." She said that it is normal to be scared because this is all brand new. She continued saying, "In the morning, try to have that time with God. Try to see who matches your desires for a friend and start gauging who has similarities and who can be a new friend.

Try not to stay in your room by yourself. Keep your room clean, especially in the morning." She finished by suggesting that by making your bed in the morning it can give you a sense of accomplishment, which can help a person's outlook for the rest of the day.

When asked what are some things new students shouldn't do, she answered, "What not to do, like I said, don't just be by yourself. Give yourself a chance to meet someone new. Start good studying habits, and if that's hard, the RAs can be there, and the teachers will also help."

Fowler's biggest piece of advice was about the mental health of new students saying, "More than anything, it is mental health. I want them to know that mental health is the same as physical health, just that you can't see it. This is the perfect place, go to Ms. Logan [Johnson] and start that path so you can prepare yourself mentally to deal with all the things you have to do: school, socially and spiritually. Don't forget your mental health."

One of the boys' deans, Dean Reading, also had some advice for new students: "Some things to help as they transition in is to communicate with home: mom and dad. That's a positive thing. Another thing is not sitting in their dorm room. Get involved with intramurals, going to eat and sitting at different tables. These are positive things they can do to reach out so others can reach into them."

Reading also mentioned the effort the supporting staff and students make to build a welcoming environment, "We talked specifically to our RAs about identifying anyone who might have a tough time adjusting to not being at home, whether that be at lunch time or at the dorm in the evening. Anytime, just paying attention as deans and RAs, at what we can do to make the transition easier."

One piece of advice both deans provided was to get outside and participate in activities on campus. Highland offers so many opportunities for community and collaboration beyond classrooms. Getting involved with clubs, ministry opportunities, and intramurals is the perfect way to get out of your dorm room and meet new people. Isolating is never the best way forward.

Some advice from a returning student who finds all of the interaction overwhelming at times is to find a place in the dorm or on campus that you can retreat to by yourself for a short break. This would be a great opportunity to spend that quality time with God. The relaxation room in Ponce Hall and a study room in the student center are two good options on campus, but with creativity and communication with the deans, there can be others.

A recurring theme across all this advice is communication. Talking to your roommate, dean, RA, or someone new, they're there for you to get support. There's nothing to fear in being vulnerable with the people who are there to support you, or in talking to a new person. There are so many great resources on campus, and so many staff who would be willing to listen to you and help you out. We can make this school year the best one yet.

SENIOR RETREAT

By: Magdalen Carlson

As Highland Academy's senior class begins preparing for life beyond high school, they were taken on a Senior Retreat. "Senior Retreat is designed to help seniors discover their God given purpose," Pastor Will Labrenz said, describing the retreat as a time for students to begin thinking about their transition from high school students to adults. Although the retreat did not take place as originally planned, the change in location to the Darrell's house did not prevent the seniors from participating in activities centered around worship, reflection and building trust with one another.

Friday evening was hosted by the Darrells and led by Kentucky-Tennessee Conference youth pastor Nelson Silva. Silva introduced the students to the "Mapbooks" they had been given. The seniors were given time to work independently through questions based on Bible passages and reflect on how those passages applied to their own lives. Afterward, the group came back together to discuss some of their thoughts and answers.

The activity gave students an opportunity to move beyond simply listening to a message and instead consider how their faith and beliefs connect to their own lives and their futures.

"I feel that the group discussions we had were very enjoyable and helped bring me closer to some of my classmates," said Lucas Mills. He talked about how he may not know what his career path will be, "but my purpose to heal others like God has done for me will not change."

The following morning, Labrenz took the seniors to a park in White House for additional team-building activities and worship. One activity required students to hold onto a rope while standing in a line and, while blindfolded, trust that they were being guided safely through the area as well as even across a road. The seniors also participated in trust falls, relying on their classmates to catch them. These activities showed Emmett Stevens that, "sometimes it really is all about faith. You have to put trust in God and believe that He will bring the best outcome. Overall the on-hand examples helped illustrate that picture, and it was fun to try something new."

Lyla Litchfield said the activity was one of the highlights of the retreat, "It was so fun. I wanna do it every month!"

During the trust falls, a Bible study group from a local church happened to be meeting at the park. After speaking with the seniors about their worship, members of the group asked if they could participate in what they were doing. The seniors welcomed them into the activity.

The unexpected interaction added another component to the retreat, giving the seniors an opportunity to practice what they had been learning over the weekend outside of their normal community and into their daily lives.

One of Kym Olvido's main takeaways from senior retreat was to "Trust in God to guide and keep you, surround yourself with others who will support you on God's journey for your life." On top of that she says to maintain your relationship with others and God.

The activities gave students opportunities to reflect on their faith, strengthen their relationships and consider the transition they are preparing to make after graduation. It helped them look at the big picture for their education and life with God.

THATS A WRAP!

(Highland summer recap)

By: Emily Richards

To some people, summer looks like the perfect time to travel to new places and try new things. For others, it means lots of trips to the pool and beach; trying to spend as much time in the water as possible. For more, it means summer camp and lots of time with family and friends. Summer can look like working a summer job to earn money for a few, and for still more, it can simply mean sleeping, eating, staying at home, and trying to find ways to avoid getting bored. This summer, the students and staff of Highland Academy found a variety of ways to make the most of their break from school.

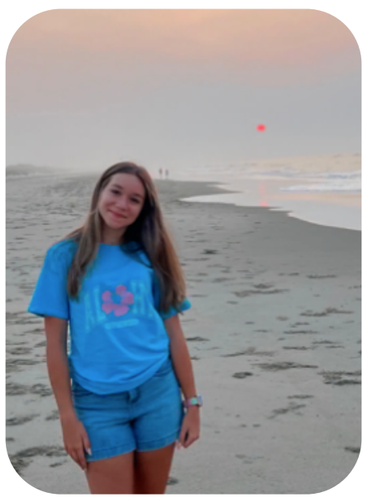
Campgoers: Attending summer camp is a great way to spend a week or two of summer break. For many camps it includes taking part in various activities, making new friends, worshiping God with others, and making lifelong memories.

Mariah Libbman went to summer camp, where she made crafts and climbed the rock wall. Her favorite part of camp was nature class.

Julia Ayers got the horse award at summer camp after trying to win it for seven years.

Malachi Lopez went to summer camp with friends. His favorite part of camp was the boats, and the most unusual part was when someone broke down his cabin's door.

CB Bagshaw, Adelaide Estey, and Osteen Wafula were also able to go to summer camp with friends and make unforgettable memories.



Swimmers and Beachgoers: One of the most classic and fun ways to spend the summer is at the beach. Tanning in the hot sun, building sandcastles, and swimming in the waves are just a few of the activities you'll see on the beach: a great place to relax and have fun. Whether swimming laps in a pool or taking a dip in the ocean, swimming is also a great way to beat the summer heat. This summer vacation, several students decided to spend part of their break either visiting the beach, swimming, or both.

Adelaide Estey's favorite part of the summer was going to a beach in the Outer Banks with her family.

Sienna Shoemaker went to Panama City Beach, Florida, and enjoyed staring at the water, listening to the waves, and doing nothing.

Emilee Siegel went swimming a lot over the summer. She was able to go to Soak City in Cincinnati, Ohio, nearly every week. Soak City is a water park attached to the amusement park King's Island, and she really enjoyed swimming there.

Dylan Soria was able to go to the beach in Tampa, FL where he got to swim, fish, and have fun.

Travelers Many families see summer break as the perfect time to travel. For students and teachers alike, it is the only break of the year that allows for a trip longer than a week or two, so many people decide to travel during the summer.

Miguel Bittencourt went on a three-day trip to New York with his family. During the trip, he was able to visit Times Square and go to museums, and his favorite part of the trip was seeing the Brooklyn Bridge.

Elijah Ruckle went on the Humanities Tour to England with Highland Academy at the beginning of the summer. During the trip, he traveled around Great Britain and enjoyed studying the life and writing process of C. S. Lewis.

Philip Kim's favorite part of the summer was taking a trip to Disneyland with his family and riding roller coasters.

A'zyah Lee went on a trip to Arizona, Kansas City, and Chicago, and attended a wedding in Arizona.

Time with Family and Friends Summertime is a great time to hang out with friends and family. The break gives time to get together with friends or plan events with family, and multiple members of Highland took advantage of that.

Zanny Darosa-Miranda was able to go to a mall and trampoline park with friends and got to spend time with her cousins and extended family.

Stephanie Rufo's favorite part of the summer was becoming a first time grandmother. She was able to spend time in Vero Beach, FL to help take care of her daughter and granddaughter, Charli Mae.
